Sometimes you must ROAR. This powerful picture book shows the importance of raising your own strong voice to defend what you love.

Sasha the bear loves the meadow in her forest more than anything. But when great, yellow machines threaten to cut and burn the forest, Sasha and the other animals must determine the best way to stop them.

"Don't go roaring," Squirrel tells Sasha. Bird tries singing to the machines sweetly. Rabbit thumps her foot at them. Deer tries running and leading them away. None of these methods work—must they flee? The animals need something louder, something bigger, something more powerful. Sasha knows her voice—her roar—is the most powerful tool she has. Because sometimes you must roar.

This picture book is the perfect introduction to showing young readers the power of their own voices—to stand up for what they believe in, to protect what they love, and to make a change in the world.

From debut author T.C. Shelly comes a rich fantasy that will make us all believe in monsters—perfect for fans of Roald Dahl or The Spiderwick Chronicles.

It's well known that fairies are born from a baby's first laugh, but a monster is born at a person's last sigh.

This story is about a creature strange and unique, created when both sounds collide at the same time. When he hatches in the underground lair where monsters dwell, he looks just like a human boy—much to the monsters' dismay. Even the gargoyles who take him under their wings and nickname him "Imp" only adopt him to steal chocolate for them from nearby shops. With feet in both the monster and human worlds, Imp doesn't know where he fits.

But little does Imp know that Thunderguts, king of monsters, has a dangerous destiny in mind for him, and he'll stop at nothing to see it come to pass.

With rich, atmospheric writing, T.C. Shelly weaves a story of family, belonging, and what it means to be human.

T.C. Shelley studied Creative Writing and Literature in college. She has been teaching English for over twenty years, and her first school was classified as the most remote in Australia. She loves an audience and long before she took up teaching, she was writing and performing her poetry and short stories. She began writing novels to entertain her daughter, who wisely suggested that she try to get them published. Shelley lives with her husband, her daughter and two dogs in Perth, Western Australia. The Monster Who Wasn't is her first novel. @TCShelly1

Newbery Honor author Renée Watson's heartwarming middle-grade novel explores the past, the present, and the places we call home.

All Amara wants for her birthday is to visit her father's family in Harlem. She can't wait to finally meet her Grandpa Earl and cousins in person and stay in the brownstone where her father grew up. Maybe this will help her understand her family—and herself—in new ways.

But New York City is not what Amara imagined. It's crowded, with confusing subways, suffocating sidewalks, and her father is too busy with work to spend time with her and too angry to spend time with Grandpa Earl. As she learns more about Harlem, her father, and his family history, she realizes how, in some ways more than others, she connects with him, her home, and her family.

This is a powerful story about family, the places that make us who we are, and how we find ways to connect to our history across time and distance.

A middle grade adaptation of the award-winning adult book about a human story behind conflict in the Middle East.

In 1967, Bashir Khairi, a twenty-five-year-old Palestinian, journeyed to Israel with the goal of seeing the beloved stone house with the lemon tree behind it that he and his family had fled nineteen years earlier. To his surprise, when he found the house he was greeted by Dalia Eshkenazi Landau, a nineteen-year-old Israeli college student, whose family fled Europe for Israel following the Holocaust. On the stoop of their shared home, Dalia and Bashir began a rare friendship, forged in the aftermath of war and tested over the next half century in ways that neither could imagine on that summer day in 1967. Sandy Tolan brings the Israeli-Palestinian conflict down to its most human level, demonstrating that even amid the bleakest political realities there exist stories of hope and transformation.

Sandy Tolan is the author of Me & Hank: A Boy and His Hero, Twenty-five Years Later. He has written for the New York Times Magazine and for more than 40 other magazines and newspapers. A sweeping epic fantasy perfect for fans of the Summoner trilogy by Taran Matharu and Shadow and Bone by Leigh Bardugo.

WHEN GODS FAIL, WHO WILL KEEP THE DARKNESS OUT?

When Lann escapes an attack from a savage wyrewolf on the eve of his fourteenth birthday, it becomes clear that he is no ordinary boy. He is to wield the legendary Dreadblade, an ancient sword forged to defeat terrible monsters from the Void. But why has he been chosen and what makes him so special?

The power of the old gods is failing and, unbeknownst to Lann, powerful and terrible forces are conspiring against humanity. As nightmares threaten to become reality, he will be thrust into a battle against the greatest darkness his world has ever faced. It is time for him to face his destiny.

Steve Feasey lives in Hertfordshire with his wife and children. He says he didn't learn much at school, but he was always a voracious reader. He started writing fiction in his thirties, inspired by his own favorite writers: Stephen King, Elmore Leonard, and Charles Dickens. His first book, Changeling, was shortlisted for the Waterstones Prize and became a successful series. He is also the author of the acclaimed Mutant City series. This is his first novel set in the world of Stromgard. @stevefeasey
